

Zeeland

The location for your plant-based meat production project

Zeeland offers unique advantages for plant-based meat production

1

A strong multimodal infrastructure that allows you to easily supply a growing market

- In the last two years, the sales value of plant-based meat in the Netherlands has grown 54% while the sales volume has grown 49%.
- During the same period, the sales value of plant-based meat products through discounters such as Aldi and Lidl in the Netherlands increased by 78%, while the sales volume grew by 69%.
- Nearby markets such as Belgium, Germany, and France have also experienced exponential sales growth since 2018.
- Several highways facilitate truck-based logistics from the province to nationally and international markets-
- Rail access into the Netherlands is available in Vlissingen and into Belgium at Terneuzen.
- Transport via barges on canals is available into other parts of the Netherlands, Belgium, France, and Germany.
- Products can also be exported via the North Sea Port terminals.

2

Direct access to your required raw materials

- Zeeland is home to Meatless, a company producing diverse products that are used as ingredients in the production of vegetarian and vegan food.
- The region is also the largest agricultural province in the Netherlands with approximately 2,180 agricultural companies growing cereals, potatoes, grain legumes, sugar beets, wheat grain, and flax.
- The North Sea Port has a Food Port in Vlissingen that facilitates access to raw materials. The Food Port also offers facilities such as warehouses, cold storage, and packing stations.

An innovative ecosystem to support your business

- Zeeland is also home to a range of other potential partners in the plant-based meat supply chain, including leading food technology companies.
- Local cold chain logistics providers include Kloesterboer, ZZC, and KOTRA.
- Dedicated training programs in areas such as food chemistry and quality management provide the specialized workforce for your project.
- As the regional association for the food sector, Food Delta Zeeland aims to promote the production, processing, trade, and consumption of food products.
- “Protein Delta” is a cooperative cluster among industry, academia, and government to strengthen the production of sustainable protein sources and promote the consumption of plant-based products in the province.

4
